YOUnger Painters Dominate

This Time at O.S.A. Exhibition

Some Impressions of the Year's Best Work Gathered by Star Critic—

Measure of Improvement Noted.

In a symposium article on the exhibition of the Canadian Society of Artists, here in the Dominion, it has been the custom of the writer to reserve a special place for the young artists. This year, however, there has been a marked improvement in the older artists, who have shown a decided superiority, especially in the field of portrait painting. The young artists, on the other hand, have shown a decided lack of originality and imagination, and have failed to rise to the level of the older artists.

Younger Men Dominant.

Besides the exhibits of the older artists, there were also exhibits of younger artists, who, though not quite as accomplished as the older ones, showed an evident enthusiasm and determination to excel. The exhibits of the older artists were characterized by a certain stiffness and lack of vitality, while the exhibits of the younger artists showed a marked originality and freshness. The younger artists were more adventurous and less restrained, and their work was more daring and more original.

An Assorted Portraiture.

Notable were Mr. F. M. Parkinson's portrait of a boy, "The Boyhood of a Genius." Mr. Parkinson has shown a great deal of originality and imagination in his work, and his portrait of a boy has a certain vitality and freshness that is not often found in portrait painting. Mr. Parkinson's work is characterized by a certain boldness and originality, and his portrait of a boy shows a marked originality and freshness.

The Benson Store.

Subjects Distinctive and Pictures

When the absolute distance was in the Art Show, it behoved me to look for a picture that could speak to me, and I found it in "The Benson Store" by L. S. Harris. Mr. Harris's work is characterized by a certain boldness and originality, and his picture of a store shows a marked originality and freshness.

Uncouth Naked Strength.

Another picture by the same painter, "The Benson Store," is characterized by a certain boldness and originality, and his picture of a store shows a marked originality and freshness.
